Symbol and identity

A guardian that stays attentive.

A settled watchdog communicates watchfulness and protection through a recognizable subject. Its posture is calm; the identity avoids an attacking animal or a police crest.

What still needs testing

The guardian is direct, but dogs are familiar security imagery. The final contour would need further differentiation. Recognition is not evidence of originality.

Use the name plainly

NIVRA stays in normal uppercase supporting typography. No monograms, hidden letters or modified letterforms. Use one shared identity for Command, Camera, Respond, Admin and Trust.

Reproduction

Provisional clear space: one-quarter of the symbol height. Do not stretch or rotate. Final geometry, single-colour variants, minimum size and small-screen recognition require a selected master.

Graphic language

Use a stable baseline, a solid vermilion field and generous white space. Keep the guardian whole on small uses; avoid turning it into an all-over mascot pattern.

Voice and product language

Before impact. is the leading line. Use calm observations and clear actions: Human review required; Review event; Acknowledge; On scene; Situation clear. Do not promise guaranteed prevention or automatic policing.

Image direction: real places, useful lines of sight, people kept anonymous. Board scenes are illustrative, not deployments. Brand colour does not encode urgency on its own. The PDF and tokens set copy/type/colour rules; final symbol files follow selection.

Symbol and identity

Hold the moment open.

Separated solid forms and a small intervening stop express the moment before contact. The system uses visible intervals in its layouts, linking observation with a chance to respond.

What still needs testing

The mechanical construction is less literal. It must be tested for recognition without an explanation, and the small intervention element needs a one-colour solution.

Symbol and identity

Keep the wider situation in view.

Three unequal planes spread into a broad field. The associated panoramic image language suggests awareness of a developing situation across space and time.

What still needs testing

The three-plane mark is abstract and may read as a fan or crown. Its relationship to surveillance needs to survive without the photographic presentation.
